

Company outing Waterjet on tour

Ordinarily our employees make all the arrangements for the company outing in secret, as a surprise for the management. This year everything was different: Car dealer Emil Frey invited the entire Waterjet workforce to the “Oldtimer Classics” in Safenwil.

Walter Maurer, not only the founder and proprietor of Waterjet, but also a passionate automobile enthusiast, was in his glory, which came as no surprise in the shining brilliance of the chrome and metal of the restored classic cars. The parallels of the – older – corporate history of Emil Frey AG and Waterjet AG in view of the ongoing development and expansion of Waterjet are fascinating.

One of the high points of the day was the limited admission into the restricted area of Roos Engineering, an enterprise of the Emil Frey Group that specializes in classic car restoration. The rule there: Photography prohibited.

Rumor has it that there were lustrous encounters of classic cars with a market value of several million Swiss Francs there. Roos Engineering is one of the few officially recognized places for brand restoration in accordance with reverse engineering, and services, among others, Aston Martins. Here too, there were some interesting parallels to draw: the special restoration technology here and the self-developed specialties of the enterprise Microwaterjet.

At the end of this successful outing all employees were granted the privilege of going out for a spin on the company’s circuit in the historic vehicles – sigh, even if “only” as passengers.
